A 'one size fits all' regulatory approach for intensive landuse activities is not supported, particularly for target catchments in the Horowhenua district. The Council opposes the submission in principle. The target catchments in Horowhenua is characterised by diverse land use activities and primary production systems, nutrient management profiles and environmental effects. In the absence of a robust catchment-wide approach to nutrient management and transition planning in the Horowhenua target catchments, and buy-in from landowners and key stakeholders, PC2 will not achieve the objectives of integrated resource management and fulfil the principles and purposes of the RMA. Further stakeholder engagement with key prior to notification was scant, and is now imperative before final decisions are made to ensure that multiple perspectives are heard and responded to, in accordance with Schedule 1 of the RMA 1991. The Council submits that a collaborative planning approach with all stakeholders would be a better alternative, and is more likely to deliver a long lasting, enduring transition plan for the target catchments in the Horowhenua District.
